Invisible Cities features two generations of improvisers coming together in a tour de force of improvisational intimacy. The recording features Perry Robinson, who almost single handedly kept the jazz clarinet tradition throughout the 1960s-80s, and Steve Swell, New York City's young keeper of the jazz trombone flame. On Invisible Cities, Swell and Perry speak a language that those outside their realm of understanding and knowing rarely experience…a language that expands the Art of the Duet.

"With little fanfare New York-based Steve Swell has become one of the most accomplished improvising trombonist…through hard work, not some major label publicity machine." – Ken Waxman, JazzWeekly

"Steve Swell extends the lineage of adventurous trombonists, Roswell Rudd, Gracham Moncur, and George Lewis with his daring sense of playing and composition." – John Murph, Jazz Times

"Robinson is still the 'sui generis' master of his own idiom. Whether you are looking for an endless array of composed music, an utterly original improvisational voice, or simply a gateway to other worlds of sound and consciousness, Perry Robinson is one-stop shopping." – Matt Snyder, music critic
